

12 days ICSSR-Funded Capacity Building Programme for budding Social-Science Faculty

Introduction:

The intricate tapestry of human society is undeniably woven from the complex interplay of social interactions, cultural nuances, and economic realities. Social sciences offer a powerful lens through which to examine these multifaceted forces. By delving into human behaviour, societal structures, and historical patterns, these disciplines equip us with the critical thinking, research skills, and empathy needed to tackle today's complex challenges.

Social sciences are the foundation for informed decision-making and effective policy. From government offices to corporate boardrooms, insights from sociology, anthropology, economics, political science, and psychology are indispensable. By unravelling the complexities of human relationships, social institutions, and cultural dynamics, social scientists contribute significantly to policies that promote social justice, economic prosperity, and environmental sustainability.

The discipline's relevance extends far beyond borders. In our interconnected world, grappling with issues like climate change, migration, and globalization, social sciences provide essential frameworks for understanding and responding to these complexities. To effectively address the challenges of a rapidly changing world, social science faculty must stay updated on the latest theories, methods, and technologies. The 12-day capacity building program is a crucial step in this direction. By exposing faculty to India's diverse challenges including statistical tools for policymaking, the country's growth conundrum, and the interplay of society, culture, and sustainability the program aims to equip them with the knowledge and skills needed to drive positive change, so that development results in a harmonious coexistence between humanity and the planet, with culture serving as a bridge, not a barrier.
